shoved the snake into the garbage bag. And there was no way she was going anywhere near it. Seriously, she wasn't going within 50m of the car. I immediately jumped into my car and raced to Hopetoun Park as a matter of urgency.

Because the woman needed her car you ask? Because the husband was in hospital and she needed to be with him? No. I was worried that the snake might be suffocating! Sure enough, there was the bag in the back of the Ute. About 15 very tight knots I estimated. I quickly took the snake down to the nearby river and released it into the dense vegetation along the river bank. It was a juvenile Eastern Brown Snake. I returned to the woman to let her know that the snake was in the bag and that I had safely released it well away from her property, never to return. Well, not until it grows up anyway. She thanked me profusely and asked how much she owed me for my troubles. She admitted that she did not have very much money with her. Embarrassed about how easy it was and sympathetic to the fact that her husband obviously didn't intend to harm the snake, I agreed that whatever she had on her to cover my petrol costs would be fine. I received $12.65. As I drive home and reflected on how I had just spent 2 hours of my Sunday to earn $12.65, it hit me. I probably missed a golden opportunity to buy a very cheap Ute! If I told her that the snake had escaped from the bag, I suspect she would possibly have given me the car. I did at least get to save a beautiful Eastern Brown snake and watch it safely slither away.

Thank you Wildlife Carers ~ A poem

by Annette Frederenko

My flesh is burnt, my fur is singed
I'm blinded by the heat
My paws are sore, I fled so fast
The flames I tried to beat.
My home is razed, no grass to graze
My hollow tree is gone.
I have no nest, no place to rest
But still my will is strong.
I need your help, I am confused
But blindly do my best
I pray that soon I will be found
And at a Carers, rest
They'll do their best to care for me
My burns and eyes they'll treat
They'll search for us in blackened bush
And leave out food to eat.
And if with Grace I do survive
This Horror I've been through
You can thank all Wildlife Carers
For the loving work they do.

The leader of the "gang" has also gone home, who, upon the day of his release, came around to say goodbye to us at the shelter, and Bobby the Boo-Book from "B" Cell in "B" Block has also been released, but that is another story for another day. The snake in the ute

by: Manfred Zabinskas

It's Sunday afternoon and the phone rings. It's a snake call from Hopetoun Park, Bacchus Marsh. The woman caller is frantic for help. There is a snake in her car and she desperately needs to use the vehicle. She begs me to come straight away.

I quickly ask some questions about the snake and am concerned about the possible difficulty and danger of trying to locate and then remove the snake from the inside of a car. I had visions of it twining itself into the springs under a seat. She couldn't tell me what the snake looked like or how big it was. I explained that the snake might be difficult to find and could possibly even escape before I got there. After all, it must have found a way in. "No, no!" she exclaimed. "It's in the back of the Ute". Well, that sounded a bit easier but surely there was an even greater chance now of it disappearing before I got there. "It can't go anywhere - it's tied up in a garbage bag" she states.

Not sure that I heard correctly, I checked and yes the snake was inside seemed to be in a state of shock, nevertheless they were overjoyed that the RFS had come to help. Our task was to relieve the Victorian CFA crews, mop up remnants of the fire, put in control lines to prevent further outbreaks and be on standby for property protection if the fire broke out of the control lines.

The first week the forests were silent and virtually no wildlife was seen. However, by the second week we began to see wombats, possums, Eastern Grey kangaroos, wallabies and thousands of rabbits! We rescued a thrush that

by Colin Wood

I had an email from John Davidson of the international club of the New England University asking if we could arrange a talk on our native snakes for the overseas students. He explained that most of the overseas students that study here are aware of our venomous snakes and are afraid "to go outdoors" for fear of being bitten.

Kelly, Amanda, Sasha & Andrew

I spoke to our team of snake handlers and got together with Andrew, Kelly and Sasha and four of Andrew's non-venomous snakes and met about 30 overseas students near Wright's Village one afternoon. I spoke for a while about our mostly very shy snakes and the fact that all they wanted to do was get away from our after all "you are too big to eat so they really don't want to bite you". Then Andrew unveiled his pythons and, I was surprised, most of the students were very comfortable handling them, even two young children "had a go". John thanked us and said could we make it a regular occasion.

and very much in need of repair. So after the necessary TLC, medication, and "physio", we decided that his right wing had just a hint of untidiness about it, but we didn't have the facility to test fly him, without danger of having to chase him all over the paddock if he was, in fact, not viable. The Beechworth Prison had only recently completed a structure to house large raptors in need of R&R from Healesville, so we asked the Prison Governor if we would be able to try out this fantastic facility and find out if Bobby could once again sustain flight.

Not bad; but obviously in need of rebuilding his muscles, it was decided that Bobby the Boo-Book be consigned to "B" cell in "B" block for a short sentence while he regained strength, their first "inmate", he quickly became quite a celebrity. The suggestion was made that the "Community Gang" might be able to construct a suitable flight aviary at our shelter, resulting in our being inducted as deputies, or more accurately, as "Prison Volunteers", while the most wonderful enclosure took shape. Our "boys" were a lovely bunch, all due for release in the relative short term, and "Captain Crook's Cottage" took shape in between copious cups of tea, tall stories, that would curdle milk, and a gentleness that belied their history as they melted under the charms of the various creatures in our care.

One such patient was a Lace Monitor who had been found with his tail in an appalling state, gangrenous and flyblown, we had to amputate all but a short section which was all neatly sewn up and bandaged. The dressing, obviously had to be changed fairly regularly. The leader of our lads was a huge man, covered in tats, battle scarred and built like a side of a barn, but he became the self-appointed nurse-aide and at that stage the goanna had not been named. As with all decisions concerning the labeling of things from babies to bridges, a great deal of thought was given as to a suitable name and of course there were a great many suggestions, some of which could never be described in a narrative such as this, many with reference to some of the less popular guards, and some that were just totally offensive to anything or anyone in a position of authority. With some very careful manipulation of the debate, some fairly inoffensive and tame persuasion, we managed to have everyone agree to calling him "The Governor"! The Governor has since been

Raising funds for Victorian wildlife carers

by Julia Rose

Those of us who log onto Ozark will have been reading the postings from the carers involved with wildlife rescue and the devastating fires in Victoria.

Jill Chetwynd and others at the last meeting began to collect donations to do something for those who have lost so much. I wish to thank Pearl Doyle at the Creeklands Clinic and Jill and Rene Pauvert (Rene on the Mews Café) for having collection boxes on the counter. Many others have sent cheques to NTWC which have been posted direct to Wildlife Victoria with a stamped addressed envelope for a receipt by return mail. Those who requested a receipt from NTWC have had one posted this week, please let me know if yours has not arrived.

I have divided the funds thus, $289.00 for Nigels Animal Rescue, $289.00 for Help for Wildlife and Wildlife Victoria received $1,390. There is more to send and this will be finalised next week. I have asked the recipients to send us a brief message for members and local media to give some detail of how the funds raised had helped.

We included some Brenda wraps to cheer them up which we know they will do.

and joey bags from our wonderful supporters Brenda and John Martin in Guyra. This time we have some 'just right joey bags' in lots of wonderful cheery colours. THANKYOU, we know the joeys and carers will have happy smiles now. Each joey gets a special new "Brenda wrap/bag".

Don't forget to send Brenda a photo of the joeys in care in their special rugs too.

Honey ~ beware

from Jenni Drewit

'Honey is not recommended for debilitated animals as its high levels of fructose and glucose give a quick energy hit followed by an equal or greater let down. Honey can also contain dormant endospores of the bacteria Clostridium botuli- num, these endospores can transform into toxin-producing bacteria in immature intestinal tract, leading to illness and even death.

Honey or glucose is not recommended by a well known wildlife vet to hydrate dehydrated animals/birds as delivering either honey or glucose directly into the stomach of a dehydrated animal causes the stomach to draw vital fluids from other parts of the body into the stomach to dissolve the honey/glucose content of the hydration fluid, causing further dehydration instead of correcting the problem.'

20 head of cattle were seen attempting to survive around what was a very large dam near Yarra Glen. At this time, Victoria had only 2mm of rain since Christmas. People who enjoy Yarra Glen wine should save it for special celebrations. There will be no 2009 vintage. Many vines are destroyed, if they survived burning then the grapes are shrivelled up due to heat or tainted by smoke.

The RFS deployed more than 3600 firefighters from over 900 brigades to Victoria also found that the amount of toxicity in the leaves of eucalyptus trees rose when the level of carbon dioxide was increased.

Ian Hume, emeritus professor of biology at Sydney University, estimated that if current levels of global CO2 emissions remained stagnant, it would result in a noticeable reduction in the koala population in only 50 years.

Koalas, who have already been displaced from the most nutritious trees on fertile land due to farming and suburb production, only eat the leaves of about 25 of the 600 species of eucalyptus in Australia, a number that Hume believes will be reduced drastically in the very near future.

Recovery From Fires in Victoria

By Stella Reid

It is day 46, our world is very quiet, just the wind and gentle rain. No sounds of electricity, no tv or radio. This is a lovely place, I do not think about the loss of the little ones at the moment. We look forward to building a new home for the ones to come. Without them our world would have no meaning. The little ones fill our hearts and minds. I have started to look at homes to build and would like to build what I call a large wombat hole, which we will call a home and the little ones will call home. We will be living with them. In to the earth, covered by earth. I went to the library and have lots of books to look at. We will be closer to the little ones, if we can work out how to live like them. Thank you for all your kind letters and e mails, we will reply in the near future. If you have any ideas for me, If you were starting again, how would you live, your ideas and thoughts would be a joy for me to see and read. Even if you think it strange, do let me know. In our world nothing is strange.

Koalas Are the Latest Victims of Climate Change

It seems that, once again, "human problems" are showing how they effect non-humans as well. In the latest display of the climate change domino-effect, Australia's native koalas are the victims.

New studies show that the rising level of carbon dioxide pollution in the atmosphere depletes nutrients from the leaves of the eucalyptus tree- the primary, and often only source of food for the koala.

Community Partnership Account with NECU

from NECU website
www.necu.com.au

New England Credit Union offers a Community Partnership Account (CPA) which assists community-based organisations with their fundraising activities. The CPA is a full access savings account that offers a competitive interest rate and a guarantee that NECU will reward the account holder's nominated community group with an annual bonus payment. The Account holder WINS with a competitive transaction account, the community group WINS with financial support and NECU WINS as we are able to direct more funds back into the communities in which we operate!

How does it work?

Interested Community Groups need to register with New England Credit Union to become a Recipient Organisation. NECU will then place the organisation's name on our list of recipient organisations and individual members can elect to support their favourite groups by opening a Community Partnership Account.

On 30 June each year NECU calculates the average annual balance of accounts held by supporters of each recipient organisation. This amount is then used by NECU to make a 1% bonus payment to the chosen Community Organisation.

How can you support your favourite community group?

You can support your chosen community organisation without it costing you anything. As long as you have money in your account, your chosen organisation will receive an annual bonus from NECU. Thanks to supporters choosing their favourite community organisation, the recipient can continue to enjoy this bonus payment each year.

Focusing in on life as a Wildlife Carer.

by Julia Rose

What is wildlife caring all about you might wonder, as you hand over a baby bird to a Northern Tablelands Wildlife Carer. Well with fifteen years with NTWC this volunteer can tell you. After completing training and becoming authorised to care for native animals a whole new world opens up. There are so many new skills to learn.

Rescuing native animals, especially in urban areas, is always a challenge if it is a snake or kangaroo or even a possum from a chimney.

Most animals will bite and scratch to defend themselves which isn't much fun. When captured, if animal is ok there is the problem of where to release or relocate within it's territory. NTWC is able to help home owners by putting possum boxes in back gardens for the ousted ceiling dwellers. Koalas do not usually come down poles without help from a cherry picker with a licensed operator and be warned frightened koalas can really bite and scratch. Another big job is answering the incoming calls, we might need to think about a wide variety of problems locally or even further afield. Many callers just want information. If the animal needs help then we try to find a rescuer or local carer to travel and collect animals. Sometimes after big storms, strange coastal birds drop in which we have never seen before, so out come the identification books or we log onto a web site. After that there is the dilemma of finding fresh fish for the birds dinner, feeding them first and finding something else for us later. Rescuing bats and flying foxes means more than a training course, it means being vaccinated for Rabies. Having birds in care also means keeping feed on hand from composts and a garden with healthy worms and grubs.

If we decide to become 'Mum' for a possum or macropod joey, an incredible journey begins for six to nine months and each animal is different with a character all of its own. Late night feeds you thought were a thing of the past, not when there is a tiny kangaroo or possum in care. But it is all so rewarding just to see them grow and then go back to being a native animal. Our vision of ideal habitat changes and we become very
